Making art for the ears

Saturday: Chris Talver and Aaron "AZ" Zernack have been making "art for the ears" for about a year now. As an electronic musician, AZ comes to the stage with beats and rhythms in mind on his drum machine, looper and guitar effects processor. With his goal "to make the crowd move," AZ creates abstract sounds over the beats. Every show is different. Talver's music is more ambient, peaceful and lighthearted. This weekend, the two will be joined by Michigan's Animal, performing songs on a guitar and four-track. Video DJ Esteban will add visuals to the music, and the event will be available on Esteban's podcast at www.radiochicguero.uncerodros.org.

When: 9 p.m. Saturday

Where: Contemporary Art Initiative, 527 Main St.

How much: Free

Winter Wolves

Saturday: Hibernation? Wolf Park's wolves don't need no stinkin' hibernation. Wolves forgo the "sleeping through the winter" thing. The cold months are the wolves' favorite time to party as they're feeling their friskiest and their coats are grown out and looking good. The folks at Wolf Park can take guided walking tours through the park, watch the happenings with the main pack, go on a nature walk with park naturalist Gale Mosher and get a lesson they'll never forget on how roadkill deer becomes the wolves' supper. A deer corpse is like filet mignon to a wolf.

When: 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday

Where: Wolf Park, Battle Ground

How much: $7, $5 for children 6 to 13
